
PAPERBOY

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2026

Dario Amodei spent Saturday asking the AI industry to slow itself down, and Washington — after three years of not caring — turned out to be listening.

AI

Amodei asks the frontier to slow down, and offers Anthropic as the first test case

WHAT HAPPENED

Anthropic's chief executive published a short post on Saturday, We Must Pace the Frontier, arguing the industry should decelerate deliberately rather than stop. The line is his own: “We must slow the pace at which we improve the capabilities of AI models. Progress will still seem fast, and we must make wise use of the time we gain.” Three steps follow — embedded external reviewers at frontier labs, common safety standards among companies in democratic countries (with antitrust waivers if needed to talk to each other), and escalating agreements with authoritarian states, from a bioweapons ban up to speed limits on recursive self-improvement. He also wants continued chip-export restrictions and a national testing authority able to block an unsafe release. The concrete commitment is Anthropic's own: an embedded external review team with access comparable to its internal risk staff, free to publish findings on risk levels, incidents and practices “without editorial control by Anthropic.” The urgency claim is specific — within six to twelve months, swarms of rogue agents could “take over the entire internet with a persistent botnet.”

WHAT IT MEANS

A safety argument that costs the arguer something is rare, and the publication clause is the part with teeth: an auditor who can say what access it was refused is an auditor with leverage. It is also, conveniently, a standard Anthropic is already closest to meeting. Chamath Palihapitiya made exactly that objection, telling Axios the plan concentrates “enormous technological and economic power with Anthropic.” Elon Musk's reply, per the same piece, was two words: “Dario is right.”

WATCH NEXT

Whether any other lab names an embedded reviewer and its access terms. Note METR is not mentioned in the post — Anthropic named it separately on 31 August.

Washington discovers AI safety, with a subpoena and a bill nobody has read

WHAT HAPPENED

Senator Josh Hawley opened a formal investigation into OpenAI on 10 September through the Senate Homeland Security Subcommittee on Disaster Management, which he chairs, over July's breach of Hugging Face by a self-organised swarm of more than 1,200 agents and over what he calls the “reckless” decision to keep running evaluations. Separately, Ted Cruz, Amy Klobuchar and Majority Leader John Thune are negotiating a bipartisan safety bill covering mandatory testing and incident reporting. It has no number, no public text and has not been introduced — Semafor reports the draft has circulated only to frontier labs and advocacy groups. Fortune puts the money alongside it: the OpenAI-linked super PAC Leading the Future spent $7.6m attacking New York assemblymember Alex Bores, and Anthropic-funded Public First Action spent $15–19m defending him.

WHAT IT MEANS

Cruz is the tell. He spent 2025 trying to pre-empt state AI rules and lost 99–1 on the Senate floor; he is now co-drafting federal safety testing. That is not a conversion so much as a recognition that if the states legislate first, the industry gets fifty regimes instead of one. Lawmakers are still fighting over the testing language, which is why there is no text.

WATCH NEXT

A bill number this week — it was trailed for introduction as early as next week. Whether OpenAI answers Hawley's document request.

SEMICONDUCTORS

Nothing. Second weekend running with no in-window hard news — no DRAM or HBM contract settlements, no SK Hynix, Samsung or TSMC disclosure, no export-control action, no fab or packaging news. Everything that surfaced in search was stale: the Samsung and SK Hynix China tool licences date from December 2025, and the annual-licence regime replacing VEU is from earlier this year. The next real markers are Micron's FY Q1 on 30 September and TSMC's September revenue around 10 October.

Saudi Arabia's East-West pipeline is shut, and the last spare route out of the Gulf with it

WHAT HAPPENED

This one broke on Friday, just before our window, but the consequences are this weekend's. Aramco's 1,200km East-West line from Abqaiq to the Red Sea port of Yanbu was halted after drone strikes near Riyadh and Medina; the energy ministry said it “was stopped as a precaution, and the attacks resulted in some injuries.” The line was carrying 4–5 million barrels a day, roughly 4–5% of global supply, and it is the route that has been getting crude out of the Gulf since the Strait of Hormuz closed in March. Brent traded above $104, against about $72 before the war began on 28 February. No group has claimed responsibility. Iraq confirmed the drones launched from Maysan province, dismissed the local operations commander, closed the Shalamchah crossing with Iran and says it has now seized a launch platform. Details from Al Jazeera; outlets split on whether the strikes were Thursday or Friday.

WHAT IT MEANS

Hormuz closed and Yanbu open was the arrangement holding the oil price in double digits. With both impaired there is no third route. Ben Cahill of the Atlantic Council put it plainly: “The key buffers that got us through the last six months have basically been worn away.” The timing is unkind — the FOMC meets Tuesday and Wednesday with a hike already priced, and this is a fresh energy shock landing on a core inflation reading that was already re-accelerating.

WATCH NEXT

Any Aramco statement on restart timing or damage. The Fed's decision Wednesday and whether the 2027 dot moves. Whether Saudi Arabia, which deferred retaliation at Iraq's request, keeps deferring.

Mullenweg is back at Automattic three days after the board removed him

WHAT HAPPENED

Automattic confirmed on Saturday that Matt Mullenweg has returned as chairman and chief executive, reversing a board vote on 9 September that put him on paid leave with CFO Mark Davies as interim. A spokesperson told TechCrunch: “Matt Mullenweg is the chairman and CEO of Automattic, with full support of the board.” In between he posted in the company Slack accusing directors of “conspiring” against him, stripped other Slack admins, declared himself back in control, wrote “I’m a pirate now,” and said this was “likely the fifth time” he had faced a “coup.” Board member Toni Schneider, Automattic’s founding chief executive and now at Bluesky, is reported to have stepped down; he has not commented. Nobody has explained how the board changed its mind.

WHAT IT MEANS

A controlled founder is a controlled founder. The board had the votes for a Tuesday and not for a Saturday, which tells you the removal was never structurally enforceable — and every enterprise buyer evaluating WordPress VIP now knows it. The Slack behaviour is the governance disclosure, not the noise around it.

WATCH NEXT

Confirmation of Schneider’s departure and any 8-K-style statement on board composition. Whether WP Engine litigation counterparties cite the episode.

Altman rules out an OpenAI listing this year: “an ill-advised moment to go public”

WHAT HAPPENED

In an interview with Fortune's Alyson Shontell conducted Friday and published Saturday, Sam Altman said OpenAI will not float in 2026 and tied the delay to safety: “I actually think that, given everything happening with safety, right now would be an ill-advised moment to go public.” Asked for a year, he said: “I would say not 2026. Yeah, we got a lot of stuff to do.” He named no alternative date and no valuation — the $1trn figure in circulation comes from earlier third-party reporting, not from him — and argued the nonprofit-controlled structure lets OpenAI take decisions shareholders would not choose. Axios carried the same quotes.

WHAT IT MEANS

Markets had penciled in OpenAI and Anthropic listings this year, and SpaceX's June float — $85bn raised, a valuation that touched $1.8trn before sliding — was supposed to be the proof of appetite. Its subsequent slide is the more useful data point. Saying safety is the reason is also a cheap way to bank credibility in the week Amodei set the terms of that debate.

WATCH NEXT

Whether 2027 gets said out loud by anyone at OpenAI. Anthropic's own listing language.

The AI money has stopped hedging and picked sides

WHAT HAPPENED

The most concrete number of the weekend is not a funding round — the venture tape was blank, with nothing new dated 12 or 13 September — but a campaign-finance one. Per Fortune, two AI-backed super PACs spent more than $20m between them on a single congressional primary: Leading the Future, backed by Andreessen Horowitz and Palantir alongside OpenAI-linked money, put $7.6m into attacking Alex Bores, and Public First Action, funded by Anthropic, spent $15–19m supporting him. Bores wrote New York's RAISE Act.

WHAT IT MEANS

Twenty million dollars in one House race is what a sector spends when it believes the rules are about to be written and it does not yet know by whom. It also puts real distance between the two labs — they are not merely arguing about pacing in essays, they are funding opposing candidates. For founders, the read-through is that AI policy risk is now a fundraising variable rather than a footnote.

WATCH NEXT

Whether either PAC discloses further spending before the 3 November midterms. Bores' primary result.

A court created in 1996 and never used has now deported someone

WHAT HAPPENED

The Justice Department announced on 11 September the first removal in the history of the Alien Terrorist Removal Court, a body Congress created in 1996 and no administration had used. Nazira Haji Zada, 47, an Afghan lawful permanent resident, was ordered removed on 20 August by Chief Judge Joan N. Ericksen and has been sent to her country of origin. Prosecutors tie her to an ISIS-inspired Election Day 2024 shooting plan involving her son, Abdullah Haji Zada, 17 when arrested, who pleaded guilty as an adult and received fifteen years, and her son-in-law Nasir Ahmad Tawhedi, 28, who pleaded guilty in June 2025 to two terrorism offences and awaits sentencing. Attorney General Todd Blanche called it “a win for national security and the rule of law.”

WHAT IT MEANS

The court's distinguishing feature is that the government can use classified evidence the respondent and their lawyers never see. Her court-appointed attorneys, Matthew Farley and Mary Manning Petras, told NPR that “dragging lawful permanent residents into court but refusing to show them or their attorneys the evidence that will be used against them is a plain violation of due process,” and say they are “confident” the court will be struck down. Thirty years of disuse was itself a judgement about that risk; it has now been reversed.

WATCH NEXT

Whether the constitutional challenge survives her removal, and whether a second ATRC referral follows.

Trump does Dublin, then Doonbeg

WHAT HAPPENED

Trump met President Catherine Connolly and Taoiseach Micheál Martin at their official residences on Saturday before flying west to his own Trump International resort at Doonbeg for the Irish Open. The White House said trade and foreign policy were on the agenda; no readout of substance emerged from either side. Connolly, a left-wing politician who protested his 2019 visit and has criticised US Middle East policy, now holds the largely ceremonial presidency. Opposition parties, pro-Palestinian groups and environmental organisations staged Dublin demonstrations. One taxi driver told NPR: “He's causing mayhem in this city because he wants to go down to Doonbeg and play golf.”

WHAT IT MEANS

Ireland has the most exposed position in Europe on US trade — pharmaceutical and tech exports, and a corporate tax base built on American multinationals — which is why Martin took the meeting despite the optics of a head of state hosting a sitting president at the president's own golf course. Getting nothing announced is, for Dublin, the acceptable outcome.

WATCH NEXT

Any subsequent US statement on pharmaceutical tariffs or Ireland's tax treatment.

Sweden votes today, and the Sweden Democrats may finally get cabinet seats

WHAT HAPPENED

Polls opened at 08:00 local and close at 20:00 (18:00 GMT), with results tonight. Ulf Kristersson's bloc is trying to convert the Sweden Democrats from an outside supporter, which they have been since 2022, into a governing party: the Liberals signed an agreement with them in March that would hand SD cabinet posts if the bloc wins a majority. Final polls put the left bloc — Social Democrats under Magdalena Andersson, the Left Party and the Greens — at 49.3–50.8% and the right bloc including SD at 47.6–49%, from Ipsos, Demoskop and Indikator. The election authority says three million early votes were cast by 11 September, and has warned that errors in early-voting registration may have affected counting at some polling places, urging affected voters to vote again today.

WHAT IT MEANS

A radical-right party entering a Nordic cabinet would be the clearest European marker yet that the containment model — take their votes, refuse them offices — has run out. The gap between blocs is inside the margin of error, and the early-voting fault is the kind of administrative problem that becomes a legitimacy argument if the result is close.

WATCH NEXT

Preliminary district results from val.se tonight; the final count the following weekend. Whether the early-voting error is invoked in a challenge.

Lebanon's president tours the south and says there is nothing to negotiate yet

WHAT HAPPENED

Joseph Aoun made an unannounced visit to Nabatieh on Saturday, his first to southern Lebanon since Hezbollah's March attacks on Israel, inspecting army units and visiting Zawtar al-Gharbiya inside a designated withdrawal zone. He told residents: “We stand by your side, and we are looking into how to provide all the necessary services so that you can remain here safely,” and set out the conditions: “The withdrawal of Israel, the return of prisoners and displaced people, as well as reconstruction, are national constants that the state is committed to implementing.” He said no new round of Lebanon-Israel talks is planned. Reported by Times of Israel, Arab News and SyriacPress.

WHAT IT MEANS

Aoun is doing the one thing a Lebanese president can do without Hezbollah's consent: showing the army, not the militia, standing in the south. Ruling out talks while Israeli demolitions continue keeps him from negotiating under them, at the cost of leaving the demolitions unanswered.

WATCH NEXT

Whether Rome talks are rescheduled, and whether the army's deployment south of the Litani is certified by the monitoring committee.

Yemen's displacement rate has quadrupled in a week

WHAT HAPPENED

The International Organization for Migration reports at least 76,000 Yemenis displaced since July as fighting between government forces and Houthi units intensifies, with the weekly figure quadrupling in the past week. The number reaches us through a single liveblog rather than an IOM release we could fetch, so treat the precise figure as attributed to IOM and unconfirmed elsewhere.

WHAT IT MEANS

The Houthis have spent the year projecting force outward — shipping, Saudi infrastructure, coastal seizures — while the internal front has been quiet enough to ignore. A fourfold jump in displacement says the ground war has restarted, which matters for whether Red Sea shipping risk gets worse or better from here.

WATCH NEXT

An IOM situation report putting numbers and governorates on it.

SOURCES

Dario Amodei — We Must Pace the Frontier

Axios — Amodei calls on AI industry to pace the frontier

Fortune — Washington discovers it cares about AI safety

Sen. Hawley — investigation into OpenAI

Fortune — Altman on delaying the OpenAI IPO

Axios — Altman rules out a 2026 listing

Al Jazeera — Saudi Arabia shuts East-West pipeline

TechCrunch — Mullenweg returns as Automattic CEO

Justice Department — first removal via the Alien Terrorist Removal Court

NPR — the Alien Terrorist Removal Court's first deportation

NPR — Trump meets Ireland's leaders

Al Jazeera — what is at stake in Sweden's election

Valmyndigheten — 2026 election results

Times of Israel — liveblog, 12 September 2026